

Fair, Direct and Effective Communication Online

How to build leadership presence and communicate effectively

Part of the Strategic Leader Certification

Your instructor:

Jim Doyle blends his diverse knowledge, 25 years of experience and a deep passion for helping others to grow and achieve their goals. His corporate coaching and leadership development skills were refined inside manufacturing organizations including Cargill, Prime Therapeutics and St. Jude Medical. Jim's diverse experience helps manufacturing organizations large and small, build leadership and supervisory competence with the skills to improve execution.

Leaders increase their personal effectiveness and serve as an example for others to follow by being transparent, fair, direct and collaborative. But how can you be direct while building trust? This workshop will help ground your communication in empathy, develop leadership presence, and provide a framework to follow to avoid common mistakes leaders make when communicating.

Tools and Topics Learned Include:

- Define leadership presence
- Link self-awareness and ability to influence with building relationships
- Understand the end-to-end process of communication
- Identify common pitfalls of communication and ways to avoid them
- Explain EQ and leadership presence as a measure of communication
- Assess personal values and be in alignment of those of the organization to build leadership and communicate effectively
